Japanese 140A – The World of Early Modern Japanese Literature
Spring 2019 (Provisional Syllabus)

This class will survey some of the most celebrated works of literature from Japan's early modern period (1600–1868). We will consider texts from a wide variety of genres, including fiction, travelogues, memoirs, and poetry, and we will also read and view dramatic forms such as the puppet theater and kabuki. All readings are available in English translation; Japanese knowledge is not required.

Our class meetings will typically begin with an introductory lecture that will help to put the literary works we read in their historical and cultural context. The focus of each class meeting, however, will be close reading and discussion of the texts. Students are therefore expected to read and reflect upon the assigned materials prior to class and to participate actively in discussion. Success in this four-credit course is based on the expectation that students will spend a minimum of 9 hours of study time per week in preparation for class (readings, papers, discussion sections, preparation for exams, etc.).

Students will also be asked to brief (about 200–250 well-chosen words) response essays to the weekly readings at least four times during the semester. These are to be posted to the online discussion forum (Latte) on the night before a class discussion. Short quizzes concerning the readings and lectures will be given periodically.

A short paper (5–7 pages in length) will be assigned halfway through the term that will ask students to make some comparison between two or more of the works we have read. Suggested topics will be provided but students are welcome to formulate their own questions in consultation with the instructor. As a final project, each student will also be required to submit a final paper (about 8–10 pages in length) that will provide a chance to explore a work of the student's choice in greater analytical depth. Many of the texts we read as a class will be excerpts from longer works; for the final paper, the student is asked to choose one of the texts from which we have read an excerpt and read it in its entirety. Both writing assignments will be evaluated for their coherence, critical argumentation, persuasiveness, and thoroughness of engagement with the material.
